

A blurred background image showing a person in a red shirt standing in a crowd. The person is the central focus, though out of focus. The background consists of other people and what appears to be an outdoor setting, possibly a fairground or festival.

A 150 meter tall swing carousel - in the style of the familiar fairground ride - that is also a pop-up all-you-can-eat buffet restaurant. It will be not only the worlds tallest swing ride, but the world's only swing ride restaurant. As diners sit and are swung around in a continual circle at a high height, they will be able to help themselves to a similarly rotating buffet spread that will form the inner circle; swinging around inside the layer of chairs. They will be given special elongated cutlery - or 'grabbers' - that will allow them to safely pick up the food they would like to eat. The ride lasts as long as the eating lasts; so everyone must wait until all diners have had enough to eat, before being returned to ground level. Those who are full or reach the point of regurgitating food must remain on the swing until all have stopped eating. There is no limit to how much can be eaten. We are all familiar with the sight of running sushi, but this buffet will boast dishes from every corner of the globe, making it a truly international experience. The restaurant will travel to various different cities where it will pop-up for a limited time only. It will give diners the chance to feel as if they are on the move while sampling foods from all over the world, in one reasonably-priced sitting.
