

A peer to peer help group for those who want to support each other in coping with the terror of time; and those seeking temporalities outside of convention. Participants would not be present in order to be ‘fixed’ by each other; but what we hope to achieve through this activity is a new ontology, or rather as many as possible (the word ontology does not need to be used, instead we could ask “What modes of being are there, in this world?”); and what the participants are after, we would not even try to guess. They are invited to contribute by sharing their experiences of being left out and/or not fitting into the measured and linear mode of time that structures our lived experience. There is no “message” to submit, no set goal to reach; the conversation does not need to address the philosophy of the event, or refer to any actual clocks. The project is open ended, begins a few hours before and ends at the closing time of the hosting facility.
